A Job for the States

Back in 1918 a prominent advertising executive of a large New York City advertising agency was talking about the need to appeal to the American public. He said, "You see, the American public is very conservative. They are not easily influenced by advertisements." I don't know if he was right, but I do know that his statement is true today. I think he was right, but I also think that he was wrong. I think that the American public is more receptive to advertising than ever before. I think that advertising is more important today than it was in 1918. I think that advertising is more important today than it was in 1932.
