Hawthorne resident has a unique hobby

Stamp collector enjoys his palm pilot

Scott Fink

In a world where most people are preoccupied with the latest technology, one local resident has found a unique hobby that combines his love for collecting and his passion for innovation.

Scott Fink, a resident of Hawthorne, has been collecting stamps for over 20 years. But what sets him apart from other collectors is his use of a Palm Pilot to keep track of his collection.

"I've always been interested in technology and collecting, so when I found out about the Palm Pilot, I knew it was the perfect tool for my collection," Fink said.

Fink's collection includes stamps from all over the world, and he spends hours every week organizing and updating his database on his Palm Pilot.

"It's not just about the stamps themselves," Fink said. "It's about the stories behind them, the places they've been, the people who've owned them. It's a fascinating hobby that keeps me engaged and entertained.

Fink's collection has grown over the years, and he often attends stamp shows to meet other collectors and expand his knowledge.

"I've made some great friends through my collection," Fink said. "It's not just about the stamps. It's about the people who share a common interest.

Fink's Palm Pilot has become an essential tool for his collection, and he wouldn't have it any other way.

"I love the convenience of having all my information in one place," Fink said. "It's like having my collection in my pocket.

Fink's unique hobby has gained the attention of local collectors, and he's become an inspiration for others who might be hesitant to try something new.

Tonight at 10 — choose reality instead of fluff

The evening newscast isn't necessarily the place to see a feature that explains the details of a complex plan. This means we're often left with a chatter of broken ideas on the airwaves that don't add up to anything. The stories that end up on the air are often sordid and ill-conceived and often don't have the attention of the people who are supposed to care about them. The evening news is not the place to see a clear and informative explanation of the plans that are being proposed.
