Next Tuesday, Hawthorne voters have the opportunity to judge the merits of the current school budget, which carries a $12.5 million budget and which candidates will vie to support or oppose it.

As the political battle rages in Ralph Chambers, who is competing his four sons on the same ballot, it begins to appear that this fact has to be learned on the job too. He has only one son that has trained — his son, Ralph Chambers.

Chamberlains appear to sit on the fence with the rest of the fact that his business does not allow time for sciences. He notes that it is the right duty to win over the school board candidates.

Jerrold Lobasco is a newsman on the scene, but has his own of the more impressive backgrounds of the candidates that have chosen to run for the school.

He has been a business school student, a political consultant in elections, and an independent supporter of public education, although more recently he has been vacillating between yes and no on whether the year's budget will carry the day.

His experience is working with the local school board, and he has often been heard to say that this is in the public imagination that the teacher is the one with no money. Although the school board is not in the public eye, he has heard that the teacher has no background.

Members of the board of Education last week decided to continue their search for a new superintendent of schools. As of now, the board has narrowed its list of candidates to five, and is expected to make a decision by the end of the month.

The board is currently searching for a replacement for Dr. John P. Keating, who retired last year after serving 15 years as superintendent. The search process began in October and has included interviews with candidates from across the country.

"We have been very impressed with the candidates we have interviewed so far," said school board President John A. Pasquale. "We are looking for someone who will be able to lead our district into the future and we believe we have several excellent candidates to choose from."

editorial

Big city politics threaten integrity of school election process

The way we vote, the real issue in Tuesday's school board elections is whether Hawthorne voters will continue to be swayed by preconceived notions of education. Some local candidates are running for the seat in the hope of using the platform to further their careers. Others are running in the hope of getting their issues on the record and then moving on to other things. The result of this election could be startlingly different from the last school board election.

The reason for this is simple: The city of Hawthorne has become a battleground for candidates who want to use the school district as a platform for their own careers. This is not to say that the candidates themselves are bad people or that they don't care about the school district. But it is to say that their primary concern is winning the election, not serving the district.

This is a problem because the school board is supposed to be an independent body that is free from political pressure. It is supposed to make decisions based on what is best for the school district, not on what is best for the candidates' careers.

This is why the Hawthorne school district needs a new, independent board of education that is not influenced by outside political pressures. The new board should be made up of people who are committed to serving the school district and not to furthering their own careers.

College star making it big on Broadway

By Phil Capo

Gone are the days when Broadway was a place for 16-year-olds with a dream of making it big in show business. Today's stars are college graduates with a proven record of success. But it doesn't mean that these students are all from the Ivy League. Many of them are from smaller colleges and universities where they have developed their talents and refined their skills.

The most recent example of this trend was the rise of the stage star Dan Zimmerman, who played the lead role in "Falsettos," a musical that ran for over a year on Broadway. Zimmer man, a graduate of the University of Maryland, started his career in theater as a high school student in Havre de Grace, Maryland. After graduating from college, he landed a role in the musical "Falsettos," which is now playing on Broadway. The show's success has opened doors for Zimmerman, who now has a solid career in the theater.
