Revealing the Strikers' Benefits Law

The Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that company-sponsored benefit plans for strikers are legal. The decision means that employers can continue to offer benefits to their employees while they are on strike, even though they are not technically paying for the benefits. The case,冊as v. United Steelworkers, has implications for the labor movement and for the economy as a whole.

What Are The Fatal Needs?

The American people, the American Press, the American politicians, have been engaged in a serious discussion recently of the need to reduce the size of the country to which we have long been committed. This is an important issue, one that has long been debated and one that requires careful consideration.

The nation’s prosperity depends on the ability of its citizens to work and to productively contribute to the economy. In the face of increasing global competition, we must ensure that our workers are equipped with the skills and knowledge necessary to succeed in the marketplace.
